AN OLD PIONEER GONE.

To the Editor of the Oregonian:

[illegible] George Gay died near Wheatland, Oregon, on the 7th of [illegible], aged 72 years. Mr. Gay's early life was full of adventure. He was born near [illegible], Lancashire, England, August 15th, 18[illegible]. At the age of eleven he went to sea as an apprentice and served for four years. After following the sea for eleven years, making voyages to different parts of the world, in [illegible] he shipped on board the [illegible] Kitty, of London, and in 18[illegible] left the ship at Monterey, in California, and joined Ewing Young in a trapping expedition along the coast to the mouth of Rogue river. In 1835 he started overland from California with a small party consisting of John Turner, one of the survivors of Jedediah Smith's party that was massacred near the mouth of the Umpqua in July 1828. The other members of the party were Dr. Bailey, John Woodworth, Daniel Miller or Sanders, "Big Tom," a Scotchman, and another whose name [illegible], and a squaw belonging to Turner. The party had 17 head of good horses. About the middle of June, 1835, they encamped for the night in a place known as "Point of Rocks," on Rogue river. The next morning the Indians [illegible] Turner, who was the leader of the party, [illegible] conversed with the savages through his squaw. [illegible] about the camp, and at a signal attacked the party with [illegible] and arrows and [illegible]. The attack was so sudden and unexpected that the Indians obtained possession of three of the guns with which Turner and his party were armed. The struggle was desperate. [illegible] hands of [illegible] defense. Some of them discharged their rifles [illegible] the bosoms of their assailants and then [illegible], and laid about them with the barrels. Turner, who was a herculean giant from Kentucky, [illegible] his rifle, seized a big firebrand from the camp-fire and laid about him, lustily knocking his assailants right and left. The other men following their leader's example drove the Indians from the camp. Dan Miller and another were killed on the spot, while the six white survivors of the [illegible] were all more or less seriously wounded. While the fight was going on the Indians drove off the herd of horses and stole all of the baggage and camp equipage, together with three rifles. Three of the remaining guns were rendered useless by having their [illegible] broken off by the clubbing process. The six survivors, all more or less seriously wounded, [illegible] to the brush and kept the Indians at bay with the remaining guns. By traveling in the night time and hiding in the brush during the day time they managed to elude the Indians, but suffered greatly from their wounds and for want of provisions, clothing and blankets. Dr. Bailey had received a fearful blow from a tomahawk, which split his under jaw from the point of his chin to the throat. Many old settlers will recollect the unsightly scar that disfigured the doctor's face for life. Sanders, one of the wounded men, was left on the south Umpqua, and "Big Tom," the Irishman, was left on the North Umpqua, their wounds rendering them unable to travel. Their companions subsequently reported to Dr. McLoughlin that both men had died. Turner, Gay, Woodworth and Dr. Bailey, after reaching the head of the Willamette valley, differed about the route. Turner [illegible] took the Willamette for the Columbia. Gay, in his sea voyages, had seen a chart or map showing that the Columbia ran west, and determined to strike due north in search of the great river, upon the banks of which he expected to find Hudson Bay traders and trappers. Turner, Woodworth and Bailey followed down the Willamette until they, in a famished condition, reached the Methodist mission below Salem. Gay kept along the foot hills on the west side of the valley, and crossed the Rickreall about where Dallas now stands, and crossed the Yamhill river at the falls near the site of Lafayette; passing along the west side of Wapato lake and crossing the Tualatin plains he reached Wyeth's trading post on Sauvie's island some time in August. Before separating from his comrades Gay had cut up his buckskin breeches to make moccasins for the party, and made most of the journey in a naked condition, with the exception of the tattered remnants of an old shirt. The mosquitoes nearly devoured him in the bottoms along the [illegible] of the Willamette. This perilous trip of nearly 500 miles was made forty-seven years ago. It was a terrible test of the endurance of a naked, wounded and starving man. In [illegible] Gay returned to California with [illegible], and brought the first band of Spanish cattle to Oregon. While returning overland he received a fearful wound in the Siskiyou mountains from an Indian arrow, the flint head of which he carried embedded in his flesh for five years. When the writer made the acquaintance of George Gay, thirty-nine years ago, he was a handsome man, a man of a powerful physical organization, combined with great activity, [illegible] as ever bestrode a steed, and as expert a vaquero as ever swung a lasso. Along in the early '40s he was the wealthiest man in Oregon, outside of the Hudson Bay Company; his herd of cattle and horses roaming over what is now the southern parts of Yamhill and the northern parts of Polk counties. In 184[illegible], he built the first brick house in Oregon. [illegible] Commodore Wilkes and his officers, and it [illegible] was a general resort for travelers and emigrants. He dispensed a rude but unbounded hospitality to which all comers were welcome. I have known him to slaughter a bullock for the breakfast of his guests, the remnants of which were eaten for supper. Gay was kind and gentle in his deportment, but always retained a dash of rollicking [illegible] which more or less pertains to the sailor, the trapper and the mountaineer. His property gradually slipped through his hands; the wily arts and tricks of civilization were too much for his [illegible], and like nearly all of the generous and hospitable old pioneers, he died poor. The old Kentucky giant, John Turner, so well known and famed for his herculean strength, good nature, quaint [illegible] and dauntless courage, through the Rocky mountains, New Mexico, California and Oregon, from 1826 to 1847, was killed in the latter year in California by the accidental discharge of his own rifle.

Dr. Bailey was a well educated English physician and surgeon, and was for many years the principal doctor in the Willamette valley. He died a few years since at Champoeg. George Gay was the last survivor of the little party that marked the trail to Oregon with their blood and reached here under so many difficulties nearly half a century ago. N.

The Senatorial Election.

Dalles Times Mountaineer, Rep.

Taking into consideration all the circumstances we can but consider the result a great victory of the pure element of the party over the worst features of bossism, machine rule and professional politicians. Perhaps never in the history of the country has there been such a determined effort on the part of a few office-holders and those interested in the spoils of office, to elect a man who would subserve their purposes, as has been witnessed at Salem during the senatorial fight. Three bold attempts at bribery have been laid bare and other schemes of the ring of bosses have cropped to the surface which show a shameful state of political manipulations.

When the eighteen could not be approached by bribes threats were used, and every other inducement which would cause them to swing from their honest convictions and the interests of the constituents whom they represented, to that of the dictation of the federal officeholders and others who composed the lobby at work for the election of John H. Mitchell. When we take all these matters into consideration [illegible] understood that all these well laid plans which have been maturing for years, aided by unlimited capital, have been defeated by the firmness of eighteen legislators, who could not be corrupted by the promises of position or money, or be made to swerve from the path of duty by threats, it is certainly [illegible] to say that this election of Mr. Dolph and the defeat of Mr. Mitchell was a great moral and political victory of the people over the domination of federal patronage and political bosses.

Morally, if morality is an element in politics, Mr. Dolph is far the superior of Mr. Mitchell. He has enjoyed an unblemished reputation during his twenty years residence in Oregon, and now stands at the head of the legal profession in the state, both for ability and integrity, while Mr. Mitchell's character has been clouded by many wrong and questionable acts. Mr. Mitchell, during his long residence in Washington, obtained control of the patronage of the state, and undoubtedly used it for his own advancement. Being a friend of the present administration he is one of those politicians who follow the [illegible] of stalwartism, which have put us the life of a president, and will, in the coming fall campaign give New York and Pennsylvania to the democrats. Mr. Dolph has not had the opportunity to mingle in politics, and has never been a chronic office seeker or professional politician. What characteristics in this particular he may develop in Washington City, we know not. If he [illegible] to control the federal offices of this state for his re-election or the advancement of his favorites, the handwriting on the wall at Salem [illegible] that a political guillotine will stop short his career.

DOLPH'S DECLARATION.

Oregon's New Senator Defines His Course as the People's Servant.

FAITHFUL PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES.

He will Devote his Time to the Interests of the State—Favors the Improvement of the Columbia and the Cascade Locks.

In answer to a communication from the editor of the Dalles Inland [illegible], Hon. J. N. Dolph, senator elect, writes [illegible] defining his position [illegible] of a corporation and the servant of the people of a great state who have chosen him to represent them in the legislative halls of the United States. Following is the letter:

Portland, Oct. 2[illegible], 1882.

John Michell, Esq., Editor Inland [illegible], The Dalles, Oregon—Dear Sir: I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your [illegible]

I would much prefer [illegible]

[illegible]

To the first question I answer No. I expect to devote my entire time and energies to the duties of my office.

To the second question I answer, [illegible] I [illegible] oppose any further appropriation for the completion of the locks at the Cascades, but shall endeavor not to be behind [illegible] or any other senator or representative [illegible] from this state, in my efforts to secure further appropriations for the continuation of this important work.

To the third question I answer, that I believe congress has the constitutional power to appropriate money for the purpose of internal improvement, and that it is the duty of the general government, in the interest of commerce, to improve our rivers, lakes and harbors, and I am in favor of the removal of impediments to navigation in the Columbia river so as to make it a highway for commerce to the seaboard.

To the fourth question I answer that when I enter upon the duties of senator from Oregon I shall become, if I may be permitted to use the expression, the attorney of the state, and shall endeavor to serve her with the same energy and fidelity which [illegible] I have in my long professional career [illegible] my clients.

I shall endeavor faithfully to represent all her interests, I shall [illegible] the best of my judgment, all just, [illegible] in all cases towards corporations and individuals, and upon every question which arises, endeavor to protect the rights of every section of the state and to promote every legitimate enterprise for the development of her resources.

My own interests and the interests of corporations and individuals shall be [illegible] secondary to the interests of the people of the state. For fear some one may think the foregoing not specific, I will add that in the case mentioned in your question, I shall consider it my duty to support the people's interests, and further, that should the occasion arise when the people [illegible] demanding protection for their interests against the aggression of corporations, should call on me, I should not hesitate to urge, but would simply urge such radical measures as good judgment and a just regard for the rights of all might require.

I do not wish to be misunderstood however. While I shall jealously watch and protect so far as I can, the interests of the people, I believe that every [illegible] enterprise in the state and that the building of the railroads which have been completed and are in process of construction by the O. R. & N. Co., and the completion of the N. P. R. R., will prove of incalculable benefit to this state and the whole northwest, and that it would be [illegible] to the true interests of the people if I should throw any obstacle in the way of their progress. My own views upon the relations of our transportation interests to the other interests of our people are stated in the following extracts from a response made by me to the toast: "Our Transportation Companies," proposed at a dinner given by the British Benevolent Society in Portland, last May, in honor of the birthday of Queen Victoria. Among other things I then said:

"Transportation is the most important part of commerce. The international transportation of a country is one of its most vital interests. To borrow in substance a figure of speech from the gentleman who proposed the sentiment, internal transportation is to a country what the blood is to the human body. Without it the resources of a country remain undeveloped, the iron and coal and copper and lead remain in the mines, the timber in the forests remains uncut, grain is not raised for export, manufactures, to any considerable extent, cannot exist, trade is limited, cities do not grow, the country languishes. Let lines of transportation be opened, and the life current begins to circulate. The mines are opened, the forests are felled, the soil is cultivated, manufactures are started, cities grow, the country prospers, wealth increases, new enterprises and careers [illegible] taken, new industries spring up, [illegible] wages are certain, [illegible] Without internal transportation facilities, trade, [illegible] mineral wealth and unbounded resources may favor the progress of wealth [illegible] poor.

This great empire of the northwest, with its unrivaled resources, is just beginning to feel the impulse of the new life [illegible] by the [illegible] facilities for transportation. Our population is being rapidly augmented, new [illegible] to settlement, large tracts of country heretofore unoccupied are being put under cultivation along the lines of railroads, as they are extended, [illegible] settlers with wealth, enterprise and energy, to carve homes for themselves from the public domain. When our present lines of transportation shall by the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad be connected with the railroad system of the nation, and we begin to feel the [illegible] of the business [illegible] of the nation, I confidently believe we shall enter upon such an era of development as has never been witnessed in any other portion of the union.

'We travel the [illegible] of the empire takes its way.' The time is not distant when this, the northwest, country will surpass New England in population and wealth [illegible] and natural resources. I believe the child is born who will behold the most populous, wealthy and powerful portion of the United States west of the Rocky mountains.

I close by reasserting that the transportation lines of a country are the means of stimulating all its industries. Whatever, therefore, promotes the transportation facilities of a country, promotes directly or indirectly, all its legitimate industries. Whatever cripples the transportation facilities of a country, cripples every enterprise of that country. Every blow aimed at the transportation interests of a country, is aimed also at its agriculture, manufactures, trade and commerce."

Hoping that I have answered the questions you have been pleased to propound to me in a manner [illegible] by you [illegible] satisfactory to your readers, I am,

Your obedient servant,

J. N. DOLPH.

A WISE DEACON.

"Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors visiting us so often?"

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time; kept my family well and saved the doctor bills. Three dollars' worth of it kept us well and able to work all the time. I'll warrant it has cost you and the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time."

"Deacon, I'll use your medicine hereafter."

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 31, 1882.

MR. DOLPH'S LETTER.

It is but natural that the position of Mr. Dolph in relation to corporations should be a subject of thought and [illegible] discussion among the people. He [illegible] to become a public servant. [illegible] confidence reposed in [illegible] his professional engagements [illegible] companies of the state [illegible] there are none who [illegible] servant of the people [illegible] ing the public interests [illegible] above all special, local, personal or other considerations.

His letter to the Times-Mountaineer [illegible] Dalles, which we reprint today, meets [illegible] and fully the questions stated by the editor of that journal. It may also answer questions of the same or similar import which many others would like to propose. Or again, it may meet inquiries which, though partially suggested, have not as yet been very distinctly formulated in all minds. Mr. Dolph states his position with all necessary distinctness. There are no equivocations in it. He makes no reservations. His letter shows that he appreciates the duties and responsibilities of public station. He is to be a representative of the people and of the great interests of the state. Perceiving that his duties will require it, he will, of course, resign his professional connection with the corporations. No one who knows him had doubted from the first but he would do so. His perception of his duty as a representative of the whole people would make it impossible for him to maintain a connection which, if not necessarily incompatible with proper service to them, nevertheless would be thought so by many, and in consequence would subject his official action on important public questions likely to arise to censure, or at least to misconstruction.

Yet of course Mr. Dolph, as a friend to the development of all the interests of this new country, sees the necessity of railway progress as one of the most important factors in it. To secure this the railways must be fairly dealt with. But the main part of the subject of railway regulations is in the hands or under the control of several states, whose legislatures can alone deal with the details of the problem as they may be presented. It is not likely that railway corporations will ask further aid or additional franchises from the general government. Yet congress, having the sole power to regulate commerce between the states, may be called upon to deal with the subject at large, and Mr. Dolph's statement leaves no doubt that in such event he will be found on the side of the people for all reasonable measures. And he states in distinct terms that he will not allow any regard for railway or other interests to prevent him from doing all that may be in his power to increase the facilities for transportation by other modes.

Surprise has been expressed in certain quarters that those who opposed Mitchell partly for the reason of his connection with and partiality for railway corporations, should have been willing to accept Dolph without raising a similar objection. But there is a difference, and the difference is the men themselves. Mr. Dolph is not a man about whom there can be any uncertainty. He is no dissembler to profess one thing and do another. All his conduct is open and clear. No one is ever in doubt as to J. N. Dolph's position on any question. He is not the man to profess devotion to an interest or cause, and at the same time craftily entertain a plan to betray it to its enemies. When he speaks on a subject you know precisely where to find him. He is no equivocator. He splits no hairs. He binds himself against his open professions by no secret engagements. The utterances of such a man are entitled to the confidence and respect which they always command.

THE INDUSTRIAL VALUE OF WOMAN.

Woman's work and wages is a subject which appears quite differently according to the standpoint from which it is approached. The experienced lady "principal" of a public school finds it difficult to understand why she should be content with $1200 for the same work that the gentleman principal in the next district receives $2000 for doing. The matter was discussed in the August number of the North American Review by Mr. Charles W. Elliot (not the Harvard president), who finally concluded that "competition must result everywhere in the degradation of woman and the pauperization of man." He regarded it as certain that woman's value to the state is to be measured by the wages she can command for her labor.

In the latest issue of the same review Mrs. Julia Ward Howe takes issue with the former writer, and calls attention to the fact that the greater part of woman's work, as society now stands, is not wage-earning, but the wearing and incessant activities of home. These, at their broadest, exercise and exhaust her powers in a service to human living which, if not measured by wages, is, nevertheless, to be regarded as of a transcendent character. Mrs. Howe belongs to the "woman's movement," and holds that although her wages are at present unjustly low as compared with man's for doing the same work, she will eventually be able to right herself by combining into mutual societies and by acquiring the ballot.

That woman's wages are low in most of the occupations open to her is true enough. Yet there are certain justifications for this. It is woman's destiny to be married, in which estate according to American notions, her wage-earning should cease. This termination of wage-earning activities is the natural and highly desirable one for all women, except a very few who may happen to have either a decided vocation for single life or an overmastering aptitude for some trade or profession. The dream of equal partnership of husband and wife in wage-earning industry is a fertile one, for in the long run the industry of the man is made more productive and enduring by the sympathy of his wife and her care in providing a home than would be compensated by her giving up her domestic duties and entering upon the actual "support of the family." Besides we must not overlook the fact that as wife and mother woman is in a position to exercise the most decided influence which her powers permit.

The principal reason for the low wages of woman seems to be overlooked by both these writers. It is, namely, that her labor is generally unskilled. At the bottom of the social ladder the very poor are obliged to work at menial occupations for daily bread. The women of the upper classes are supported in complete idleness, or are supposed to be so. Between these extremes there is a large class of young women who desire to earn their own living for a time. They crowd into the first opening they can find, without regard to previous preparation or personal aptitude. It happens, therefore, that most of the things that women do in order to earn money are such as one can "pick up" by a little practice, and consequently, as everybody else can pick up [illegible] ly well [illegible] Hence [illegible] constantly [illegible] flowing [illegible] Wage-earning [illegible] ican women of the middle class [illegible] quently they have neither [illegible] to command high wages [illegible] tience to wait long for [illegible] betterment of woman's condition [illegible] wages is to be looked for [illegible] ly preparing herself for [illegible] and once in [illegible] en her value [illegible] top.

It seems that [illegible] needs a new [illegible] as a new law. [illegible] Hunter [illegible] word of excuse [illegible]

THE VINE AS A RECUPERATOR.

A newspaper published at [illegible] one of the [illegible] counties of [illegible] California, points [illegible] that [illegible] the growth [illegible] development of vineculture [illegible] that county, its tax [illegible] was scarcely sufficient to [illegible] four years ago [illegible] at that period [illegible] Some [illegible] the Chinese [illegible] the foreign [illegible] which [illegible] property [illegible] large [illegible] as in the [illegible] the amount of personal property is perceptibly decreased [illegible] most of the rich [illegible] mines [illegible] and that quartz mining has never been as successful as in the counties of Amador, Nevada and Kern.

The increased value of real estate is surprising. Worn out mining claims that possessed scarcely enough soil to hold the roots of grape vines in their place, are valued at ten to sixteen dollars per acre, and the settlers upon these lands are a thrifty and industrious, though not always wealthy, element of population. Their nativities are diversified, Italy and Portugal being chiefly represented, although France and Germany have contributed largely to this army of industry which is bringing wealth out of ruin and beauty from desolation. Of all sights in the world, here is none sadder than a deserted mining camp where the rusted picks are lying beside the empty flumes and the arms are folded which once flooded the land with rivers of gold. If these foreigners are reclaiming the worked-out and abandoned foothills of our sister state they are making a worthy record for themselves and deserve boundless credit for so doing.

Such an example is eminently worthy of imitation, but is it practicable outside of California? The "golden state" has mild winters and tropical summers to aid her in this work. Oregon has very short summers, while southern Idaho, that has all the tropical heat of California from May to October, has such excessively cold winters, as to preclude all hopes of success in wine-making. But down in Southern Oregon, particularly in the counties of Jackson and Josephine, grape culture and wine-making have advanced beyond the experimental stage. Between Jacksonville and Willow Springs the hillsides are covered with grapes, and the best wine made there, up to date, is from ground that has been rent asunder half a dozen times in the fierce race for gold. Want of railroad communication has restricted the growth of grapes to a quantity sufficient for home consumption; but as soon as the iron horse crosses Rogue river at Rock Point there will be cheaper freights, and, as a natural consequence, there will be an increase of acreage and a corresponding advance in the value of grape-growing lands.

So we will move ahead, slowly but surely, in the march of our progress as a great and self-sustaining state. The vine and the fig-tree shall arise from the desolation of early days and the torn bosom of our beautiful land shall bleed her wealth of purple wine richer than gold because more enduring. Peace and order follow in the train of that civilization whose improvements are most permanent. The sound of the ax and the rifle in the woods shall be hushed on the Sabbath, and the saloon and faro den shall give place to the church and the school-house. The founders of our state "builded wiser than they knew." Their descendants will retain their energy and discard the vices of an exciting and chaotic era. Out of the wreck that alone remains to chronicle the argonautic era shall grow a state of majestic size and graceful proportions, blessed with a population that shall preserve order and revere the law. Surely it was this that Bayard Taylor predicted when he wrote:

> "Thy human children shall restore the grace
> Gone with thy fallen pines.
> The wild, barbaric beauty of thy face
> Shall round to classic lines.
>
> * * * * * * * * *
>
> Till Hesper, as he trims his evening beam,
> No prouder land shall see;
> And nature finds her old Arcadian dream
> Restored again in thee."

MAJORITY RULE.

It was hoped when the contest at Salem ended that the unpleasant talk which grew out of it would cease. Those who had been active in performing a disagreeable duty at once became silent when that duty was done. There were no boasts of the battle won, no taunts for the battle lost. But this becoming silence has been broken, and by those who offend both discretion and good taste in breaking it. It is said by certain ringorgans that the men who asserted their independence of boss rule at Salem, and who by boldly opposing the election of a bad man caused the election of a good one, must be ruled out of the party as bolters. The howl that the success of the independent element of the party is a menace to party organization is repeated and re-echoed. A few fools, in excess of folly, go further and say that the existence of our nation itself depends upon such relations of majorities and minorities as would, in the instance in point, have given the senatorship to the bad man Mitchell instead of the good man Dolph. These critics forget that if a majority of the members of the legislature had at any day of the session wanted to elect Mitchell they could easily have done so. In fact, a minority devoted to the advancement of one man, stood out against a majority for more than thirty days, and only yielded in the closing moments of the session. From those who, during that tedious time, encouraged and supported this stubborn and personal opposition to the will of a majority of the members, criticisms of "minority rule" are in bad taste. It is idle to talk of "party lines" in this matter. The democrats in the legislature were as fully representatives of the people as if their party had held the advantage of numbers. The republicans who, with the democrats, voted against Mitchell to the end, stood out first against a bad man, and second against a practice which allows a small minority to control a legislature. They have not violated the sacred principle of majority rule.

Alas! all of the beautiful Mrs. Langtry's beautiful dresses have gone up in smoke. This is bad news indeed for the ladies, but masculine America will find consolation in the thought that beauty unadorned is most adorned.

"The republicans of Wasco," says the Times-Mountaineer, "are under obligations to Mr. Nichols for the manly stand he took in the legislature against the machine."

The story is as follows: [illegible]

[illegible] Rose Waters, who had herself ample justice. The minor parts of the play were entrusted to Misses Fanny Young and Eunice Shaw, and Messrs. Stevens, Holden, Galloway and Webster, who acquitted themselves very creditably, though they had but little to do. For an opening performance there was none of the imperfections which usually mark the first night of a new piece, no hitches in the stage effects, no monologues by the prompter, and weary dragging of the piece itself. All the minor details of the piece were carried out with perfect harmony, and it went like a finely adjusted piece of mechanism. The audience was large, and the play proved a successful one.

THE DIVISION QUESTION IN UMATILLA.

UMATILLA COUNTY, Oct. 28.

To the Editor of the Oregonian:

A few days since I saw this editorial paragraph in your paper:

Oregon has two new counties—Klamath, set off from Lake, and Crook set off from Wasco. The bill to create Thurston county out of the eastern portion of Umatilla failed. It passed the senate, but was not reached by the house. But it would have passed the house, too, had not the time been taken up with the senatorial contest.

And I have since seen it interpreted by the Pendleton Tribune, [illegible]

THE OREGONIAN never allows an opportunity to pass to express an opinion upon questions with which it has nothing to do [illegible]. In a recent issue that paper stated that bills were introduced to divide Umatilla county, and that these bills should and would have passed had not the senate adjourned before they were reached. [illegible] never heard any one say aught against the cutting off of the lower end of this county. Good-but a large majority of our people emphatically did not want a division as expressed in House Bill, setting off the upper county—Thurston. The lines specified in that bill were anything but fair, as it would leave Umatilla county but a poor strip of territory, while the upper county would be very large. One of our representatives, Mr. Stanton, introduced the bill and put it through the house (we believe the credit belongs to him) but it never went through the senate. It was lobbied through, however, only those know who worked for it, and when THE OREGONIAN says that this bill should have passed it is equivalent to saying that it is right to do a wrong.

There is a difference of opinion on the division question in this county, though it is by no means certain that a large majority, or any majority, opposes the proposition to set off Thurston county. On the contrary it is believed by those best informed that a "three county platform," as it is called here, would obtain a decided majority of all the votes of Umatilla county. The county is inconveniently large.

But the editorial paragraph in THE OREGONIAN, as I read it, only reported the case as it stood before the legislature, and gave no opinion on the merits of the question of division. It is evident, indeed, that your paper never made the clumsy statement attributed to it, that the bills should and would have passed had not the senate adjourned before they were reached. The Thurston county bill passed the senate, as you report, and failed to pass the house, because that body could not reach it, owing to the time taken up by the joint convention on the senatorial election.

Although THE OREGONIAN does not say that particular bill should have passed, many of us here are of opinion that it should, and we believe it will pass next session. READER.

COURTING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

A Cleveland gentleman, who is fond of a story, related to a Leader reporter a few days ago an instance of hypochondria which came under his notice when he was considerably younger than at the present time. His narrative was something like this: "When I was a boy there lived near our house, in a part of Cleveland that was then almost in the woods, a maiden lady who was in very poor health. In girlhood she was not strong, and as the years advanced she imagined herself growing more and more delicate, till at last she took to her bed, where she afterward remained in daily expectation of death. Her nerves were delicate, and in my school days the schoolmaster used to warn us urchins to keep quiet when going by her house, as we might disturb her if any noise was made. My youth and boyhood passed, and with the coming of manhood I discovered that a young sister of the invalid was a very pretty girl, and when, after escorting home from church or singing school with her, an invitation to come in was given, I was always accepted. The short and awkward visits made at first, soon gave place to the old fashioned sitting up. One evening several of the young people came in and the talk and laughter grew hilarious. It was checked instantly by a heavy thump on the floor in the room directly overhead. One warning was enough, but the frequency of the same signal afterwards tended to lessen our respect for it. It seems that she kept a big cane at the side of her bed, and by rapping with it she indicated her wants and her displeasure. Finally one night, after being cautioned several times in the usual manner without effect, the parlor door opened suddenly upon the assembled party, and the bedridden woman stood before our eyes, holding the awful cane in hand. It was the first time she had moved in twenty years. Her entrance was so sudden that she was able to give two or three stinging blows to those nearest her before an escape could be made. In a moment a shout of laughter went up, and the supposed invalid was not slow in finding that she was the cause. Her mother and sister fixed her up with suitable clothes, and she spent the remainder of the evening down stairs, and the day following she went about the family housework. I didn't marry the girl whom I courted under such adverse circumstances. She in time married and went to Massachusetts, and it was only recently that I saw the once invalid woman walking as briskly about as any person of eighty-seven could be expected to do."—Cleveland Leader.

A Bad Case of Mother-in-Law.

A miserable son in law in London appears to have taken the words of Shakespeare literally; or, rather, it may be said, he found his muscular mother-in-law too much for him. When he married the bride of his choice, he did not imagine that he was marrying, also, all of the family relatives—that is, to the extent of harboring them. But her mother according to his testimony in a court of justice, became as "a millstone tied around his neck;" furthermore, "ruling him and his wife with a rod of iron." This was certainly tough—a deplorable state of affairs in a family that otherwise might have lived in perfect domestic happiness. He was compelled, as an actual matter of self-preservation, to cause her arrest. She had sworn to murder the whole lot of them, according to the young husband's testimony, and she was he said, "a woman of extraordinary vigor and resolution." She had even turned him out of doors. "What," exclaimed the astonished magistrate, "did she eject you from your own house?" "She did," replied the applicant for judicial protection; "and would have treated you in the same way if you had been there to take my part. As a matter of fact, I was glad enough to get out of the house safe and sound." This was very hard on him; but an admission on his part, immediately following, deprives him of public commiseration. He left his wife behind to the brutal inhumanity of her mother, and with his wife he left his own mother to be beaten and otherwise maltreated.

This was a little too much for the patience of the magistrate, who justly upbraided him for his arrant cowardice. The astonished applicant for judicial relief retorted, "And so would you, sir, be only too glad to run if you had such a mother-in-law as I have got. Only last night she threatened to 'spifflicate' me, and I know she would have done it, had she got hold of me. After I had luckily escaped, she turned round and thrashed her daughter, my wife, and then she made my mother fly for her life. She has sworn that she will murder the lot of us one of these days, and I fear that she will keep her oath." One can sympathize with the unfortunate wife and daughter. To have such a poltroon of a husband and such a termagant of a mother is certainly too much of an infliction to be visited upon a single creature, who appears to have been affectionate and submissive. It may be stated that the magistrate promised the husband protection.

A Pennsylvania paper, the Carlisle Valley Sentinel, offers at private sale "several accounts, amounting in the aggregate to over $550, which have been incurred by the chairman of the several democratic committees during the past ten years, and which have never been paid." The editor guarantees the honesty, correctness and legitimacy of the bills and alleges that they have never been disputed. In case of failure to sell at private sale within six weeks a public auction will be resorted to.

The Doubting Heart.

Lakeside Musings.

"Pass the pie."

Ingomar McCloskey moved uneasily in his cozeen [illegible] as these words fell in soft cadences upon a medallion-like ear that projected out into the starry night from a head whose Grecian curves would attract attention anywhere north of La Porte. Grey-hooded Night was getting her hood on, and over in the west, where day was dying, there were huge banks of sombre clouds piled high in the horizon. The day had been a beautiful one, and now that the shadows in the glen were lengthening and the birds were twittering in a sleepy fashion amid the boughs of the locust trees, Ingomar and Gladys Perkins were sitting silently on the back porch eating apple pie.

Shoving the plate silently over to her side of the little rustic table which separated them, the young man looked steadily at Gladys for an instant, but no words came from her lips. She saw the look and comprehended its meaning in an instant.

"Why do you doubt my love, darling?" she asks. "Why is it, after I have told you so many, many times—told you with all the passionate earnestness of a woman's first and only love that you are my life, that your hopes are my hopes, your fears my fears—have told you this with my arms around your neck and my face close pressed to yours—why is it I ask, that you cannot believe me; that a look of doubt is ever on your face?"

Deeper still has grown the shadows in the glen. The crickets have begun to chirp in their noisy way, and the first rays of a moonlight that come down to earth in a silvery shower between the leaves of the locust trees bring into bold relief the haggard outlines of a sawbuck that leans restfully against the woodshed.

"I demand an answer," says the girl in an imperative [illegible] that so [illegible] "Why do you doubt my love?"

ENGLISH GIRLS OF THE DAY.

The Way in which Maidens Grow Up and Get Views of Life.

Interest in the James Gang Waning.

From the Pioneer Press.

It is a wholesome symptom that interest in Missouri, the net result of press and public in the fortunes of the James gang is [illegible] These [illegible] Frank James is [illegible]

[illegible] The real tragedy of his death is lost sight of in the [illegible] his family and friends, the state officials, the clergy, the press and the public generally. The surrender of Frank was managed with the same eye to tawdry effect. There was no particular virtue in the surrender. He was broken down in health and his gang was broken up. He could no longer live by his calling and wanted to live some other way. He could no longer make a sensation by plundering and murdering, so he prepared to take the road after the approved modern method on lecture bureau routes. This is all very well for the Missouri savages, if they like it—and they really seem to like it—but there is no reason why other communities should help to feed this appetite for notoriety. He will escape punishment for his crimes. That was probably arranged before he surrendered. He will be rewarded with a certain amount of lionizing in Missouri. But the sooner other communities drop him the better for public morals. Decent newspapers should consent to mention his name as seldom as possible, and to purge the nation of the shame which his impunity brought upon it by causing it to be forgotten as soon as possible. It is true we have a certain local interest in Frank James in Minnesota, and a certain well founded claim upon his body for the purpose of the dissecting table or the Stillwater car shops; but the hope of satisfying this claim is remote. If it were possible, after six years, to secure legal evidence to the undoubted fact of his participation in the Northfield murder and robbery, and if the legal forms of indictment and requisition were complied with, there is not one chance in a hundred that the governor of Missouri would honor the requisition. The whole civil and military force of the state would probably be employed to defend its eminent citizen. Three eminent citizens of Missouri are now entertained at the cost of Minnesota, and the vigorous efforts made to reclaim them are probably a measure of the resistance which would be aroused by the attempt to ravish another.

BILL HOOD DEAD.

A Colored Giant, the Strongest Man in America.

Bill Hood, a colored giant, who formerly lived in Madison, Indiana, died recently at his home in Jackson county, aged 70 years. Hood was a remarkable man in many respects, and for strength was without an equal thirty years ago. He was a teamster, and often, while engaged in hauling rock, would lift with perfect ease and place in his wagon flagstones that would require the strength of three or four ordinary men. When his team would stall in chuck holes he would place his back under the axle of the wagon and hoist the load out of the hole. When in his cups he was somewhat quarrelsome, and exhibitions of his herculean strength would defy the officers of the law. Upon more than one occasion they had to flood and disable him before they could arrest him. On one occasion a crowd of railroaders caught him in a saloon, and by doubling teams on him thought they could whip him. They accordingly locked the door to prevent his escape, and then informed him of their intention, when he immediately commenced to defend himself by seizing the ringleader by the nape of the neck and the seat of the pantaloons and raising him above his head threw him clear through the show window and out on the pavement. He then began to knock the others down with his fists, and floored them right and left until he had the whole crowd down, when he quietly unlocked the door and made his way home, but not without a good many bruises, as his antagonists had been busy all the time, belaboring him with chairs and such like weapons. His superhuman strength was such, however, that he soon overcame things which would have killed an ordinary man.

Conflicting Testimony.

From the Texas Siftings.

"What I want to show is who struck the first blow?" said an Austin justice to Jim Webster, who was the principal witness in an assault and battery case.

"I [illegible] dat, he hit de first lick," replied Jim.

"Are you positive that Uncle Ike struck the first blow?"

"[illegible] course I is. I didn't see him reach out and hit de fust lick? But how many licks he hit before dat fust one, or how many licks he added [illegible] him fust am more dan Ise willin to swar ter."

Where Gamblers Thrive.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

About one mile from Kansas City the state line dividing Missouri and Kansas is located. Just beyond, this town has sprung up, called Kansas City, Kansas, which principally consists of twenty or more wine [illegible] are located at this little place. After night fall cars [illegible] up and down between the two places continually. By going to Kansas City the [illegible] get the [illegible] liquor in a state where there is no prohibition, but strict gambling laws, and in five minutes, get into a state where there is no gambling law, but strict prohibition laws.

A Ball-room Car.

From the Fort Worth Gazette.

A ball-room car is the latest novelty introduced on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, and recently a merry party of St. Louis belles and beaux made an excursion over the road and danced the racquet with the train moving at forty miles an hour. The ball room was in a large baggage car sixty feet long by fifteen wide. The floor was closely carpeted, the walls beautifully painted, hung with pictures and decorated with bunting, evergreens and garlands of roses. There was an orchestra of eight pieces, and refreshments were passed around every hour.

WOLFE'S

Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps.

As a general beverage, necessary corrective of water rendered impure by vegetable decomposition or other causes, as limestone, sulphate of copper, etc., the Aromatic Schnapps is superior to every other alcoholic preparation. A public trial of over thirty years' duration, in every section of our country, of UDOLPHO WOLFE'S SCHNAPPS, its unsolicited endorsement by the medical faculty, and a sale unequaled by any other alcoholic distillation, have insured for it the reputation for salubrity claimed for it. For sale by all druggists and grocers.
